Afternoon Keynote - Strengthening Essential Skills to Rebound, Recover, & Thrive

Buck Davis

I was born and raised in a small town in South Carolina called Abbeville. Most of my family are still there. After stints in Chicago and Los Angeles, I now proudly call Atlanta, GA my home. For 20 years, I've been working in the field of diversity and inclusion, a profession that has brought me great joy and a tremendous amount of meaning in my life (along with an occasional appearance on CNN).

My work has always been about helping people find ways to bring out the best in others and themselves. I have an MBA and a Masters in Professional Counseling, which, together, have provided a nice blended foundation for understanding the business to human connection at work. I'm also relentlessly positive. And I am unabashedly passionate about sharing what I've learned (and still learning) that helps make life a more positive experience.

The Role of Nursing Leadership in Dismantling Racism

Carol Alexander DNP, APRN, ACNS/NP-BC, Tamara Bland EdD, Simendea Clark DNP, RN, Deena Nardi PhD, PMHCNS-BC, FAAN BSN, Monique Reed PhD, RN

Eliminating racism in nursing education and practice is a dynamic and challenging commitment. This commitment is dynamic since it requires an informed understanding of the role that racism and colonialism have played for centuries in nursing, and of its effects continuing to the present day. Nurses in leadership roles especially, have a responsibility to advocate for more of a voice and presence in education, in policy, and in practice by nurses of color, who comprise 19 % of nurses in the U.S. (AACN, 2015). The purpose of this presentation is to provide evidence based antiracism strategies for nursing leaders to use to identify and address racism in nursing education and practice settings. To promote diversity, equity and inclusion in U.S. healthcare generally and in nursing specifically, these essential strategies include:(a) Critical self-reflection on this issue; (b) Updating one's knowledge and understanding of what is meant by "antiracism" actions and approaches, and why it is critically needed in healthcare and nursing today; (c) Use resources to prepare you for advocacy, such as the free antiracism resources and mentorship available through the ANA-Illinois Diversity-Equity-Inclusion Expert Panel website; (d) Be intentional in advocacy decisions and actions; (e) Challenge White Privilege; (f) especially if you are considered White, then use your privilege to end "White Privilege". If indeed every nurse is a leader, then informed and intentional activism from each professional nurse is called for to halt racism and discriminatory policies and practices in healthcare, nursing education, and all of nursing practice.

Rural Health: Putting the Pieces Together to Elevate Outcomes

Janice Albers DNP, RN, PHNA-BC, EBP-C, CLC

Bringing over 30 years of experience serving rural and underserved areas through primarily leadership roles in public/community health, Jan Albers DNP, RN, PHNA-BC, EBP-C, CLC is currently an Assistant Professor of Nursing at McKendree University, Director of the MSN Program, and created an innovative MSN specialty curriculum in Population Health.

Building on her experiences spanning from a direct care provider to the administrator of a health department, she teaches population health, ethics, and leadership coursework at the MSN and DNP levels. Dr. Albers believes that all nurses have the capability of leading healthcare change. As an educator, her mission is to ignite the leader in each student to create and facilitate the needed change in the experience of health for those who are underserved and experience disparities. Through innovative integration of brain-based learning, Transformational Learning Theory, and Heutagogy, Dr. Albers focuses on empowering changed thinking and expanded perspectives in the context of population health practice.

Dr. Albers is passionate about promoting a culture of wellness through community collaborative efforts. She continues to practice in the population health realm through a county wide health improvement coalition encompassing membership from over 25 community organizations. She also served as a Coaching Fellow for the Institute for Healthcare Improvement's Leadership and Organizing for Change course, as well as the statewide Academic/Public Health Partnership funded by the RWJF and INF and the lead for the Telligen Community Initiative grant work focused on academic/practice partnerships in rural and underserved areas. Thus, she brings real life experience and evidence-based practice connecting the care continuum with a focus on rural and underserved areas.
